The 60 companies named as the 2023 Best Places to Work represent a variety of industries but share at least one thing in common: They've built a workplace in which employees feel engaged and energized at work.

That can be an advantage at a time when hiring and retaining employees is as difficult as it's ever been.

Yesterday, we announced the winners in the small and medium companies categories. Today, we have the winners in the medium-large – 50 to 99 employees – and large categories (100+ employees).

This is the 20th year for the Albany Business Review's Best Places to Work awards, and 107 companies submitted nominations to be included in this year's program. Winners were selected based on data collected by our partner, Quantum Workplace of Omaha, Nebraska.

Quantum surveys the employees of nominated companies. A significant number of employees need to complete the surveys – and rate their workplace highly – for companies to qualify for the award.

All 60 of our winners will be profiled in our Friday, Dec. 8 edition and honored the same day at our annual Best Places to Work event, held at the Albany Marriott.
