ALBANY — Pioneer, a Capital Region financial institution, has donated more than 4,100 school supplies to help students start the year prepared and ready to learn. Supplies collected from customers and employees were distributed to the Lansingburgh Central School District, Hudson City School District and Tri-County United Way, which together serve thousands of local children.

“We are incredibly grateful to Pioneer for their generous donation of school supplies and for their continued commitment to supporting students across the Capital Region,” Brian Bailey, Hudson CSD interim superintendent, said in a statement. “Thanks to their contributions, we were able to provide essential items to families in need, helping ensure our students start the year confident and prepared. Partnerships like this make a meaningful difference in our community, and we’re proud to work alongside Pioneer to support the success of every child.”

In Lansingburgh, donations supported middle school and kindergarten students, while Hudson distributed supplies at a back to school ice cream social. Through Tri-County United Way’s Kids With Packs initiative, supplies from Pioneer and other local partners were packed into more than 700 backpacks and distributed to students in Warren, Washington and northern Saratoga counties.

“No child should have to start the school year without the supplies they need,” Thomas Amell, president and CEO of Pioneer, said in a statement. “Through the Pioneer Charitable Foundation and our annual school supply drive, we are proud to help families turn the back-to-school season from a difficult time into an exciting start for every child, providing the tools they need to learn, grow and succeed.”

Pioneer’s school supply drive has provided more than 18,000 supplies to local students in need.
